Property Description

Absolutely — those are good refinements. Here's the revised description: Located in the peaceful and increasingly sought-after Quizarra area of Pérez Zeledón, this property offers a rare blend of solid construction, comfortable mountain living, and abundant natural beauty. Set on a generous 2,409 square meter property and positioned at a pleasant elevation of approximately 752 meters above sea level, the home enjoys a warm yet comfortable year-round climate, fresh breezes, and lush green surroundings that make Quizarra one of the Southern Zone's hidden gems. Built entirely with concrete block walls, both inside and out, this home was designed with durability, security, and low maintenance in mind. The structure is complemented by beautiful finishes crafted from the very rare Cristóbal hardwood, adding warmth, character, and a distinctly Costa Rican elegance to the living spaces. High ceilings enhance the sense of openness and promote excellent natural airflow, creating a bright and airy interior.
